Deconstruct the Building Blocks of Storytelling

Beyond the technical aspects, "Art of the Cut" delves into the fundamental principles of cinematic storytelling. Buster examines the role of rhythm, pacing, and shot sequence in shaping the emotional impact of a film. Through detailed case studies and real-world examples, she demonstrates how editing can elevate a story and captivate audiences.

1 Closeup of the hands

What is being done? Some mystery is fine by going in very close up, engages the viewer

2 Closeup of the face

Who's doing it? Frame it well, give "talk space" in front of eyes/nose. OK to cut off top of head, but not chin. SHOW TWO EYES!

3 Wide shot

Where is it being done? Get context, environment, mood and location information of the subject and surroundings

4 Over the shoulder

How is it done? Combine previous three ideas into one shot. Get right over shoulder for point-of-view (POV).

5 Unusual/alternative

What else should viewer know? Be imaginative: stand on a chair, crawl on your belly, vary what's in the foreground or background. This will be particular to your location or story.

6 Interview

Additional shot: interview the subject to get good usable audio for voiceover and to intercut with b-roll. (See interview hints in sidebar)

Master the Art of Collaboration

Film editing is a collaborative endeavor, requiring seamless communication between the editor, director, and other members of the creative team. In "Art of the Cut," Buster emphasizes the importance of effective communication and provides practical tips for navigating the collaborative process.
