Origins and Key Thinkers

Radical Orthodoxy emerged in the early 1990s as a reaction to the dominant trends in modern theology, which were seen as overly accommodating to secularism and hostile to the traditional doctrines of Christianity. The movement's key thinkers include John Milbank, Catherine Pickstock, and William T. Cavanaugh.

- John Milbank is a British theologian and philosopher who is widely regarded as the founder of Radical Orthodoxy. His work focuses on the relationship between theology and politics, and he has argued that Christianity offers a unique and indispensable perspective on the nature of human society.
- Catherine Pickstock is a British theologian and philosopher who is known for her work on ontology and ecclesiology. She has argued that the Christian understanding of God as Trinity provides a profound insight into the nature of reality, and she has also developed a distinctive account of the Church as a political community.
- William T. Cavanaugh is an American theologian and ethicist who is known for his work on social theory and the critique of capitalism. He has argued that Christianity offers a radical critique of the modern economic Free Market, and he has called for a return to a more just and equitable society.

Key Ideas and Themes

Radical Orthodoxy is characterized by a number of key ideas and themes, including:

- The rejection of secularism: Radical Orthodox thinkers argue that the secularization of the modern world has led to a profound loss of meaning and purpose. They believe that Christianity offers a way to recover a sense of the sacred and to provide a foundation for a truly human life.
- The centrality of Christ: Radical Orthodox thinkers believe that Jesus Christ is the central figure in human history and that his life, death, and resurrection offer a unique revelation of God's love and grace. They emphasize the importance of the Incarnation, the doctrine that God became human in the person of Jesus Christ.

- The importance of the Church: Radical Orthodox thinkers believe that the Church is the body of Christ and that it is the primary means through which God's grace is mediated to the world. They emphasize the importance of the sacraments, the liturgy, and the community life of the Church.
- The need for a radical politics: Radical Orthodox thinkers argue that Christianity has a profound impact on the political realm. They believe that the Church should be a prophetic voice in society, challenging injustice and oppression, and working for the establishment of a more just and equitable social order.
