The Authors

Peter Abelard (1079-1142)

Peter Abelard was one of the most renowned intellectuals of the Middle Ages. He was born in the village of Le Pallet in France and studied at the University of Paris, where he quickly gained a reputation as a brilliant scholar and teacher. Abelard's writings on logic and theology were highly influential, and he became one of the most respected thinkers of his time.

Heloise d'Argenteuil (c. 1100-1164)

Heloise d'Argenteuil was born into a noble family in the town of Argenteuil, near Paris. She was known for her beauty and intelligence, and she received an education that was unusual for women of her time. Heloise met Abelard when she was seventeen years old, and she quickly fell in love with him. Despite the fact that Abelard was her teacher and that a relationship between them was forbidden, they began a passionate affair.

The Letters

The Letters of Abelard and Heloise are a collection of 79 letters that were exchanged between the two lovers over a period of many years. The letters are full of passion, longing, and despair, and they provide a glimpse into the complex and tumultuous relationship between Abelard and Heloise.

In one of the most famous letters, Heloise writes to Abelard after he has been forced to renounce her and enter a monastery. She tells him that she will love him forever, even though they can no longer be together.

“My dearest Abelard,

I write to you today with a heavy heart, but with a love that burns brighter than ever. I know that you have been forced to renounce me, and that we can no longer be together. But I want you to know that I will love you forever, no matter what.

I remember the first time I saw you, and how my heart was filled with such joy. You were the most brilliant man I had ever met, and I was captivated by your intelligence and your wit. I knew that I would love you forever, and I was willing to do anything to be with you.

We have been through so much together, my love. We have laughed and loved, and we have wept and suffered. But through it all, our love has never wavered. It is a love that is stronger than death, and it will last forever.

I know that you are now a monk, and that you have dedicated your life to God. But I also know that you still love me, and that you will always love me. We may not be together in this life, but I know that we will be together in the next.

Until then, my dearest Abelard, I will love you forever.

Your loving, Heloise”
